Skin Cancers & Sun Protection for Our Pets

Animals, like people, can get sunburnt and suffer from UV induced skin cancers.

- The sites commonly affected are those with minimal hair coverage including ears, nose, eyelids and groins of those pets that love to lie on their backs in the sun.
- Animals with white fur on these areas are especially at risk. Squamous cell carcinomas are especially common on the noses and ears of cats. These will initially look like scratches that won't heal.
- If treated early enough, the team at the Veterinary Centre are able to perform a non-invasive, cryosurgery to remove them before they become advanced and require surgery. Attacking them early is the key!

Pet specific sunblock is available for pets who are at risk. These are made to be safe if your pet happens to lick it. Please make sure that any outdoor pets are provided with shelter and shade. If you have any concerns about any changes in your pet's skin, especially if small wounds seem to heal and then come back, then don't hesitate to come and see one of our friendly vets at the Veterinary Centre or pop into the shop for some sunblock today.

Cotton's Corner

Daylight savings is here, the days are longer and summer is on its way! But that means those pesky fleas are back hanging around looking to cause trouble. My people just gave me my flea treatment the other day so at least I'm covered for now. I've also had a few furry friends come in lately with the old summer itches but luckily my people have got them sorted pretty quick smart! So if you're battling with an attack of the itches or those pesky fleas are bothering you, send your people down to your local Blue Cross Veterinary Centre clinic and I'll make sure you get sorted, that way you can get those fabulous summer bodies out too!
