November is ...
Fireworks Season

Think about your pets this Fireworks Season!

Many animals find fireworks scary. It doesn't have to be that way though, so don't ignore the problem. There are lots of simple things you can do to help your pet deal with fireworks.

Close windows and curtains to muffle the noise and put on some music or a TV to mask the fireworks sound. You can also create hiding places around your home so they can feel safe.

Interesting Case Sarcoptic Mange

Abby Robertson BVSc
Veterinary Centre Oamaru

As temperatures rise, we start to see more flea problems causing itching and in severe cases, infections and permanent skin changes. Prevention is always better than cure and there are now many oral and topical flea treatments that manage fleas. Another advantage is that these products also treat other forms of skin parasites including Sarcoptes and Demodex mites, the mites that cause sarcoptic and demodetic mange, ear mites and ticks.

We have recently had a case of a young dog who was diagnosed with Sarcoptic mange, also known as scabies. Early-stage mange in dogs can be difficult to differentiate from other skin conditions so you should consult with a vet if you notice any signs of skin disease such as scratching, hair loss or scabs on the skin.

Sarcoptes mites are very contagious. Modern flea treatments are very effective at both preventing and treating sarcoptic mange and I am happy to say that our patient is feeling much happier since receiving treatment.

Never underestimated the discomfort of itching for dogs and cats as it can significantly affect a pet's quality of life. Using a regular flea product licensed against fleas, mites and ticks is an excellent place to start to rule out these pesky creatures. Just because they cannot be seen does not mean that they are not causing a problem.
